This book is the first theoretical account of urban inequalities under actual state socialism in Eastern Europe. It is argued that these inequalities cannot be explained by the capitalist past, and that new types of inequality are emerging under socialism. Categories: Other Social Sciences. Year: 1983. Language: english. Pages: 168. ISBN 10: 0198771762. ISBN 13: 9780198771760. Inequalities under state socialism: what is the evidence on environment differentiation at the neighborhood level? January 1985. A. Burnett. The development of an Observatory of Urban Inequalities was inspired by the experiences of the Observatório de Favelas (Observatory of Favelas). The Observatory of Favelas is a Brazilian organization aiming to develop research and projects addressed to tackle urban problems in Brazilian cities, with special focus on poverty and human rights. The thesis examines urban issues arising from the transformation from state socialism to a market economy. The main topics are residential differentiation, i.e., uneven spatial distribution of social groups across urban residential areas, and the effects of housing policy and town planning on urban development. The case study is development in Tallinn, the capital city of Estonia, in the context of development of Central and Eastern European cities under and after socialism. The main body of the thesis consists of four separately published refereed articles.
