The letters Ann Saddlemyer has collected give a misleading account of his interests in the years before 1896 when he met Yeats and Maud Gonne. Mostly, such letters as have turned up are carefully composed things in French and German, written to various acquaintances he met on his wanderings. Most of these letters are to Molly, and tedious they are. It is a relief to come to letters in which Synge minds his professional business: when he writes to Frank Fay at the Abbey to find out whether the company is favouring Yeats or Lady Gregory and suppressing The Playboy of the Western World and Riders to the Sea. Stephen MacKenna brought out the best in Synge. MacKenna was a spirited, malicious character, quite what Synge needed to stir him into life. John Millington Synge. Previous (John Michael Wright). Next (John Milton). John Millington Synge. John Millington Synge (April 16, 1871 – March 24, 1909) was an Irish dramatist, poet, prose writer, and collector of folklore. His grandfather, John Hatch Synge, was an admirer of the educationalist Johann Heinrich Pestalozzi and founded an experimental school on the family estate. His father, also called John Hatch Synge, was a barrister who contracted smallpox and died in 1872 at the age of 49. Synge's mother, who had a private income from lands in County Galway, then moved the family to the house next door to her mother in Rathgar, Dublin. Collected Works of John Millington Synge 4 vols.
