Tweet.Â The relationship has been described as an alliance, sometimes as a contentious one. Metaphors of 'marriage' abound, and talk of 'divorce' characterised much of the New Labour period. Worse things than this have been said in the past, such as Ernest Bevin's remark in 1935 that the party 'grew out of the bowels of the trade-union movement'! Nevertheless, most of the larger affiliated unions still regard the link with Labour as the best mechanism to influence politics in their members' interests, though a far cry from the days when Labour governments were p
