The "space race" was a Cold War competition between the United States and the Soviet Union to develop aerospace capabilities, including artificial satellites, unmanned space probes, and human spaceflight. The National Aeronautics and Space Administration (NASA) was created in 1958 as the federal agency with primary responsibility for the development of civilian aerospace research. Meanwhile, in 1998, work began on the International Space Station, a massive cooperative project between Russia, America, the European Union and Japan. It remains in orbit to this day, and is largely used to study the effects of long spaceflights on astronauts and other lifeforms, as well as studying Earth's atmosphere and the space around it. The US-USSR race to space from the perspective of the men leading the programs. By Thriftbooks.com User, May 11, 2006. If there's one thing more difficult than making history interesting to a general audience, it's writing a history of scientific achievement. While Deborah Cadbury's Space Race is not a perfect work, it does a worthy job of telling the history of the race between the United States and the Soviet Union to achieve supremacy in space. Cadbury makes this more than dry scientific history by looking at the two programs from the
