Planning describes how training activities should be visible to trainees and evaluators in clearly articulated aims, activity structures and development paths. Conducting describes a number of indicators of good practice in training activities at the different stages. Evaluating looks at whether the training is having, or has had, any impact on the trainees. Activities are not restricted to workshops, sessions and courses. They could include demonstrations, conferences, assisted planning, sharing sessions and teacher development workshops. From Teacher to Trainer. Autonomous Trainer. Lead Trai...
