Theory of production, in economics, an effort to explain the principles by which a business firm decides how much of each commodity that it sells (its "outputs" or "products") it will produce, and how much of each kind of labour, raw material, fixed capital good, etc., that it employs (its "inputs"). The theory involves some of the most fundamental principles of economics. These include the relationship between the prices of commodities and the prices (or wages or rents) of the productive factors used to produce them and also the relationships between the prices of commodities and productive factors, on the one hand, and the quantities of these commodities and productive factors that are produced or used, on the other.

It therefore allows us to analyse the antecedents to a theory as well as its effects on later theoretical developments. Comparisons between each theory and the ones preceding it will, in fact, be made, in the critical analysis of each theory. This will be presented at the end of each chapter on the theory or in a few cases group of theories after the presentation of the theory itself.
