In this particular book, we share the Cousteau team's encounters with three great creatures of the sea - the Sea Lion, Elephant Seal and Walrus, in several of their worldly habitats. If you have ever wondered what it would be like to dive in amongst that local colony of Seals, this book will point the way. As with all the books in this series, it is well written and soon becomes a good read. There will come a time, of course, when it is no longer available and those divers who have not yet added it to their bookshelf will then be found spending many fruitless hours searching for a copy. Unlike California sea lions, Stellar sea lions (Eumetopias jubatus) and northern elephant seals (Mirounga leonina), harbor seals make very little noise. While generally shy, harbor seals sometimes closely follow divers throughout long dives, and on several occasions I have had a harbor seal playfully rest its head on my fins as I was bobbing on the surface. Although Californians typically refer to northern elephant seals simply as elephant seals, a similar species known as the southern elephant seal (Mirounga angustirostris) inhabits portions of the Southern Hemisphere. The southern elephant s...
