She is the author of the best-seller Deceptively Delicious: Simple Secrets to Get Your Kids Eating Good Food, released by HarperCollins in October 2007.[66]. Seinfeld has made several political contributions, including George W. Bush's and Al Gore's presidential campaigns in 2000, and subsequently to four Democratic Party primary candidates in 2000 and 2004.[67]. "One of my secret weapons is getting my kids involved in the kitchen," says Michelle Loy, MPH, MS, CSSD, Registered Dietitian Nutritionist and owner of Go Wellness in Orange County, California. "When my kids are there by my side, helping me put kale in a green smoothie or tossing Brussels sprouts with olive oil, salt, and pepper for roasting, they're much more willing to eat them." It may take 10 or more exposures to a food before children feel comfortable trying and accepting it," Loy says. "I just keep offering the vegetable at different meals and in different ways without pressuring my kids to taste it or like it."
