Theology is a subset of philosophy—at least in part. But whereas philosophy is a lot broader than theology, philosophy does not encompass theology, for theology deals with interpretation of the divine rather than pure reason. But to liken theology to divine interpretation void of reason is—I suspect—a mischaracterization. Distinction. Theology, as defined by St. Thomas is a science which investigates the contents of belief by means of reason enlightened by faith (fides quaerens intellectum), Science - We should probably define science, as well, as I'm sure that anyone educated outside of a Catholic school in the last fifty years is going to object to the use of "science" to describe Theology - science is just a "knowledge of things by their causes (more)Loading Philosophy and Theology brings together some of the most important approaches to understanding and assessing the intellectual claims of religion. The study of Philosophy develops analytical rigour and the ability to criticise and reason logically. It allows you to apply these skills to many contemporary and historical schools of thought and individual thinkers, and to questions ranging from how we acquire knowledge and form moral judgements to central questions in the philosophy of religion, including the existence and nature of God and the relevance of religion to human life. The study of The...
