The films a country or a community produces usually reflect the upheavals, the social movements, the changing trends and the persisting traditions in that society. Sometimes, films are also a harbinger of change, when they confront and criticise an evil, and force people to reflect on negative traditions prevalent amidst them. Today a lot of churning is happening around the world vis a vis the role of women in it. This paper will throw light on the various cinemas of the world and will see how the representation of women in each cinema portrays women as independent and empowered.

In her introduction to the volume, Ginette Vincendeau makes a case for the genre as an important and critically neglected form of popular cinema. Film / Literature / Heritage includes discussions of a wide selection of adaptations from Shakespeare to William Burroughs, as well as interviews with the screenwriters and adaptors of major films from Elizabeth to LA Confidential, and directors from Martin Scorsese to Peter Greenaway.Â This volume of essays redresses the balance by examining the relationship between literature and film, representing both the view--and the critics of the view--that heritage cinema's elaborate aesthetics owe more to nostalgia than to historical accuracy.
