The First Laugh Comedy Writing Competition is a free-to-enter peer-to-peer competition aiming to help brand new writers get a foot in the door of the UK comedy industry. It's for people with credits on two shows or fewer, so people with no credits at all can enter, which isn't the case with a lot of competitions. You must be resident in the UK to enter. The prize is £250 plus short sessions with lots of different mentors, including David Schneider, Saskia Schuster (ITV Head of Comedy) and Jon Holmes, amongst others (see the full list). Visit The First Laugh website for entry requirements, rules and all the info on judging and everything else. Deadline: midnight, 8th November 2019. Please note that these schemes are listed here for your convenience. Darkness is a great time for comedy. It's when we're feeling down and gloomy that we really appreciate the power of laughter. Even a giggle will do. And there's nothing wrong with a smile. Comedy writers are valuable. Comedy is valuable. That doesn't mean that all comedy writers are good and that all comedy is actually funny, but without humour the world would be a gloomy place indeed. The sun rose slowly, as if it wasn't sure it was worth all the effort. ~ The Light Fantastic, Terry Pratchett. How was I supposed to make people laugh when I felt like curling up in the abovementioned duvet clutching that hanky? How was I supposed to write anything at all? I felt more suited to the drama genre, so it seemed like an odd twist of fate that I happened to be scheduled for the comedy newsletter. It makes realize that comedy is actually an orientation towards life. I've also read the other book by Wilde, "Great Comedians Talk About Comedy" and prefer this comedy writing one better. Neither of his books are really nuts and bolts "how-to" books but are more an examination of the psychology and philosophy of humor and comics and for that, both books are two of the best I've read when it comes to those elements.
