What does effective communication look like in the medical office setting? Use these guidelines to be understood and to promote two-way exchanges. Communication is one of the most important tools in any relationship, be it personal or professional. In the medical office, clear communications among the staff are essential for ensuring quality of care of the patients. Communication Is 2-Way. In order for communication to be completed, there must be ideas or information to be shared, someone to give the information or idea, and someone who will receive the information. Communication is best when it is reciprocal, meaning that ideas and information are shared between the two people, with each giving and taking from the exchange.

A Better Medical Practice. Establishing a good doctor patient relationship not only directly affects the outcome of treatment, but also leads to a satisfying and fulfilling practise for physicians. The physician also gains a respectable name amongst colleagues and in the medical circle, leading to healthy professional relationships even in the medical field. Decreases Chances of Errors. A good interpersonal relationship reduces the chances of the patient withholding vital information, thus avoiding chances of error in diagnosis and treatment by the treating physician. Conclusion. For a success Medical social workers work in hospitals, community clinics, and other healthcare settings to support patients and their families, and to assist the larger medical team in the coordination of patientsâ€™ care. They play an essential role in many of the non-medical aspects of patient care, including helping patients and their families navigate the medical system, assessing and monitoring patientsâ€™ and family membersâ€™ mental and emotional health, providing short term counseling and therapy, and communicating patient needs and concerns to the larger medical team. Medical social workers work closely
