In 1842, Andrew Johnson was a State Senator. During this year he bought his first slave. Dolly, a fourteen year old girl, bravely approached Andrew Johnson and asked him to buy her because, according to her future son William, she "liked his looks." A short time later, Johnson bought Dolly's half-brother Sam as well. In time, Dolly would give birth to three children, Liz, Florence and William. Sam and his wife, Margaret, had nine children. In 1857, Andrew Johnson bought a boy of about 13 named Henry. Henry traveled to the White House with the Johnson family. (Stryker, Andrew Johnson: A Study in Courage, Appendix, pg. 836). An August 2, 1947 article in the New Jersey Record tells of an auto trip of Mr. and Mrs. Fred R. Clark to Tennessee. Read the full-text online edition of Andrew Johnson: A Study in Courage (1929). The time has come when justice should be done to Andrew Johnson. Abraham Lincoln, had he lived, would have been crucified by the Radicals in Congress. Andrew Johnson suffered that crucifixion for him. Physical martyrdom is oftentimes an historical advantage to the martyr. It is true, although a paradox, that the bloody hands of Booth did much for Lincoln. Men are still living who saw Lincoln face to face and yet already he has become a legendary, almost a mystic figure.
