Each person has two identifying attributes, racial identity and whether or not they are of Hispanic ethnicity.[21] These categories are sociopolitical constructs and should not be interpreted as being scientific or anthropological in nature.[2] They have been changed from one census to another, and the racial categories include both "racial" and national-origin groups.[22][23].[^] When responding to the race question on the census form, each person is asked to choose from among the same racial categories as all Americans, and are included in the numbers reported for those races.[27]. Each racial category may contain Non-Hispanic or Latino and Hispanic or Latino Americans. Asian Americans in the heartland, however, are simultaneously integrated into and racially marginalized by the dominant society. Their small population and an upwardly mobile image render them as unthreatening but as racial Others, they must walk circumspectly as representatives of their racial/ethnic groups. Finally, the types of Asian American communities that are created, maintained, and sustained in Michigan challenge the conceptualization of spatialized ethnic enclaves and urge scholars and laypersons to rethink models of ethnic communities.[^] Subject(s): Asian-american, Ethnic Formations, Examining, Identity, Midwest, Race, Racial, Space.
