That enables the parent and child to read the same book simultaneously. â€œThe video service has been in place with the Department of Corrections for a very long time. Itâ€™s just been used by attorneys who want to visit with their clients,â€ Higgins said.

Look at this library. by SeeSawWeeWaw Jan 5. I mean, LOOK AT IT. The cozy reading nooks. The multistory stained glass windows.Â I think I've seen this in an anime. Beautiful. Reply. At a Human Library, instead of books, you can "borrow" people. People with unique life stories volunteer to be the "books." For a certain amount of time, you can ask them questions and listen to their stories, which are as fascinating and as immersive as any you can find in a book.Â After the success of this event, Abergel founded the Human Library Organization, which has been growing ever since. Though there are a few permanent human libraries, most aren't places at all, but events.
