Olympism. Baron de Coubertin's notion of Olympism he advocated for was the elevation of the mind and soul, overcoming differences between nationalities and cultures, embracing friendship, a sense of solidarity, and fair play; ultimately leading to the contribution towards world peace and the betterment of the world. The fundamental principles of Olympism are outlined in the Olympic Charter. Legal protection afforded to those with a belief in Olympism. There has been a suggestion from lawyers that, in the UK, those with a strong belief in Olympism could benefit from protection against discrimination in exactly the same way that followers of a religion are protected.
