Prevalence and Outcome. There have been few long-term follow-up studies of people with PD, but available evidence suggests that psychological and behavioral manifestations of cluster B PDs such as impulsivity and self-harm tend to become less frequent over time (Zanarini et al., 2007). In contrast, personality traits such as suspiciousness, eccentricity, and rigidity that are encountered most frequently among people with cluster A and cluster C PD seem less likely to diminish with advancing age (Seivewright et al., 2002).
