Books in review. The Invention of Humanity: Equality and Cultural Difference in World History. By Siep Stuurman. Buy this book. Stuurman's earliest (untranslated) books were about Dutch socialism, and he is obviously a supporter of both of these ideas. Both Herodotus and Sima Qian traveled widely, crossing the political and cultural frontiers that separated Greeks and Chinese from the people they called "barbarians." And both suggested that the separation wasn't as great as their compatriots thought. Again and again, the anthropological turn has produced reports similar to theirs: The natives of this or that foreign country, for all their strange customs and beliefs, are remarkably like us. Here, according to Stuurman, is a critical moment in the "invention" of humanity. 7. The Invention of Humanity book. Read 2 reviews from the world's largest community for readers. Siep Stuurman traces evolving ideas of human equality and difference across continents and civilizations from ancient times to the present. Despite humans' deeply ingrained bias For much of history, strangers were routinely classified as barbarians and inferiors, seldom as fellow human beings. The notion of a common humanity was counterintuitive and thus had to be invented. Siep Stuurman traces evolving ideas of human equality and difference across continents and civilizations from ancient times to the present. This book is a history of the idea of humanity across world history. Stuurman analyzes the idea of humanity into two other concepts, equality and cultural difference, and he offers discussions of wide range of thinkers, some well-known to a general academic audience, others less so: Homer and Hesiod, the authors of the Hebrew and Christian Bibles, Herodotus, Confucius, Stoicism, the Koran, the Chinese historian Sima Qian, Montaigne, the anti-imperialist Spanish priest Las Casas, Raynal and Diderot, Toussaint Louverture, Frederick Douglass, the 19th century American advocate of scientific racism
