A good overview of death and immortality in five church fathers: Tatian, Clement, Cyprian, Origen, and Irenaeus. Pelikan uses five different geometric shapes to describe each of their views of life and death. I found the addition of geometric shapes confusing and not terribly helpful. Other than this, Pelikan provides an excellent overview and critique of these early Fathers. A good book to read after this one might be Augustine on Immortality by John A. Mourant. flag Like · see review. Feb 13, 2018 Laura Robinson rated it liked it. To get ready for surgery (and my doctors were admirably frank about the various risks of death attendant upon the procedure), I stumbled upon a marvelous gem of a book by Jaroslav Pelikan called The Shape of Death: Life, Death, and Immortality in the Early Fathers (1962). It's no longer in print, but I do hope that it will be reprinted soon, for I found this short work of 123 pages immensely consoling, and I cannot help but think others will too. He takes them in that order, which does not follow the exact chronology of their lives, because he clearly wanted to follow the logic of their respective arguments, with Irenaeus very definitely coming out on top as the most adequate of the early fathers who thought through the question of death and the soul. The death, burial and resurrection of Jesus were critical to this development, as was the Christian promise of eternal life. In this erudite book, Mutie shows how Christians engaged with the views of death in late antiquity, coming up with their own characteristic belief in life after death. eISBN: 978-0-227-90478-7. Subjects: Religion. This chapter examines the concept of death in the Apostolic Fathers. The term "Apostolic Fathers" has traditionally been used to designate what we know as the earliest Christian writings that stand outside the New Testament.<sup>1</sup> These writings are believed to cover the time period between AD 70 and 150, otherwise known as the "post-apostolic" period.<sup>2</sup> Many of the writers of these documents remain anonymous. But they are quite engaging in their thought.

Of all the questions which, throughout the centuries, have escaped from the lips of man, there is none which has been asked with such persistence, none which has possessed interest more perennial, than "Whence do I come? Whither shall I go?" Man's origin, man's hereafter, have ever been of intensest interest to
