One Thousand and One Nights is a collection of Middle Eastern folk tales compiled in Arabic during the Islamic Golden Age. It is often known in English as the Arabian Nights, from the first English-language edition (c. 1706–c. 1721), which rendered the title as The Arabian Nights' Entertainment. The work was collected over many centuries by various authors, translators, and scholars across West, Central and South Asia, and North Africa. Some tales themselves trace their roots back to ancient and The first known reference to the Nights is a 9th-century fragment. It is next mentioned in 947 by al-Mas'ūdī in a discussion of legendary stories from Iran, India, and Greece, as the Persian Hazār afsāna, "A Thousand Tales," called by the people "A Thousand Nights." In 987 Ibn al-Nadīm adds that Abū Abd Allāh ibn Isḥāq al-Jahshiyārī began a collection of 1,000 popular Arabic, Iranian, Greek, and other tales but died (942) when only 480 were written. His statement that the stories of The Thousand and One Nights have no goal in themselves shows his understanding of the character of Arabic belles lettres, contrasting them with the Islamic religion, which aims at collecting and uniting people in order to achieve one high goal. Poets, on the other hand One Thousand and One Nights is a collection of short stories connected by a framing device in which a woman, Scheherazade, saves herself from execution by telling a series of entertaining stories to a sultan. Some tales are embedded within other tales, a character in a story sometimes tells a story to another character. The stories themselves belong to a variety of different genres, including adventure, comedy, fantasy, tragedy and erotica. The characters include historical personages such as the
