German students learning English tend to carry over German phonemic habits into English, which leads to using the wrong English phoneme (Kufner 1971: 36). This problem concerns English sounds that are absent in the phonological system of German. They include two fricatives and [two] affricates [â€¦] (McMahon 2002: 32). Important for the contrastive analysis are the voiced post alveolar affricate /dʒ/, the voiceless post alveolar affricate /tʃ/, and the voiced post alveolar fricative /ʒ/. The sound /ʒ/ is absent in both, the native English and German lexis and appears merely in loan words as in Garage . Depending on the position of this phoneme, its occurrence is varied in the two languages. Seminar 1 CONTRASTIVE GRAMMAR IN THE SYSTEM. Of contrastive typology. The Principal Terms and Notions of Contrastive Typology (isomorphic / allomorphic features, absolute / near universals, typological constants, dominant and recessive features, etc.).
