Edgar Hoover wanted King disgraced or rendered impotent by any means necessary.

But within Martin Luther King's family, there remains a persistent belief that Ray is innocent, and was set up to take the fall. FBI investigators at the time traced the shot to a rooming house across the street, and witnesses directed them to a large bundle dropped on the sidewalk after the shooting. It contained a pair of binoculars, a newspaper with a story about King staying at the Lorraine Motel, and a .30-06 Remington Gamemaster that had fired one shot. All three bore the fingerprints of an escaped convict named James Earl Ray. The King family's belief in Ray's innocence was partly influenced by the strange case of Loyd Jowers, who'd owned the restaurant below Ray's rented room in Memphis.
