"Companies like Sega, Taito and Namco believe that making arcade games is a big part of their corporate identity. They think, "This is how we started out, so this is what we'll keep doing." Arcades in Japan have never been suddenly and totally removed from the urban landscape like they were in the US or Europe." The pace of arcade-game releases has moderated from a 1990s splurge of several games a month to a 2017 sputter of a few a year. Meanwhile, the average age of gamers has matched Japan's greying demography.
